THE MAGIC SUGAR CUBE

Have somebody mark his initials on a cube of sugar with a soft black lead pencil. Then drop the cube in a glass of water. Take his hand and hold it over the glass. When the cube has dissolved the mark will be on his hand!

HOW TO DO THE TRICK:

While he is marking the sugar, wet your thumb. When you drop the cube in the glass, press your wet thumb on the mark. It'll come off on your thumb. While you hold his hand over the glass, press your thumb on his hand and the mark will come off on it.

The Little Black Sheep

“HELLO, Shorty,” said Roscoe Rabbit to Sammy Squirrel.

“I’m no shorter than I should be—for a squirrel,” said Sammy. “And if I wanted to be nasty I could call you—Ears.”

“My ears are no longer than they should be—for a rabbit,” said Roscoe, a little angry.

“And if I hear anybody calling me Half-Pint, I’m going to be mad too,” said Monroe Mouse.

“Well, well,” said Professor Oscar Owl, who had been listening. “It looks like I’ll have to call this meeting of the Fact and Fancy Club to order right away.

“Lots of people have nick-names like Fat or Skinny or Slat or Slim or Freckles or Blimpy or Red or Stretch. But we usually don’t give such nicknames to animals because all animals of one kind always look pretty much alike. They generally grow in the color, size and shape Nature intended them to. Some dogs may be bigger and stronger than others, but that’s because there are so many breeds. But you’ll notice that they always grow up to the size and color the breed calls for. And that’s true of other animals too, for there are different breeds or species of lions, tigers, elephants, pigs, cattle, sheep and so on.

“But never—well almost never—does an animal want to make any changes in himself. So much for the Facts, now I’ll tell you a Fancy Story.

“I’m glad I said almost never, because I did know an animal one time, who tried to change himself around a little bit. His name was Sherman Sheep, and you couldn’t blame him for trying to do what he did.

“Sherman was the Black Sheep of his family. You could tell that right away just by looking at him. For he had the blackest coat of wool ever seen anywhere. All the other sheep were snow-white—well not quite snow-white. After all, you can’t be outdoors all the time without getting smudged a little. At least, in Sherman’s case, the dirt didn’t show, but that’s about the only thing he had in his favor. For poor Sherman was bullied and badgered and kidded by all the other sheep from morn ’til night, just because he was a black sheep.

“Now when people talk about the Black Sheep in a family, they mean some person who is lazy or wicked or a ne’er-do-well, or a vagabond. It has nothing to do with his outside appearance. So the flock of sheep used to make life miserable for poor Sherman.

“‘You’ve got two strikes on you, Sherman,’ they’d say to him. ‘You haven’t got a chance in the world to grow up and amount to anything?

"Why not?" Sherman would ask, tears in his eyes.

"Because you're a Black Sheep," they'd say. "How can a black sheep ever be any good? You're licked before you start."

"Finally, Sherman, who believed what the others said, decided to do something about it. If a black sheep couldn't make any headway, then he'd just have to be a white sheep like everybody else. So he left the flock one day, and wandered off.

"He covered many miles that first day, and finally arrived at the cabin of a miner. The miner was just going down to the brook to wash his face and hands with soap and water. Sherman had seen him start, when his face and hands were black and grimy. In a few minutes he was pink and shiny.

"My," said Sherman to himself. "So that's how it's done!"

"The miner left the soap on a rock, and went back to the cabin. Two minutes later, Sherman was knee deep in the brook and covered all over with soapy lather. He scrubbed and scrubbed, and then rinsed himself off. He looked himself over, and saw no change. He was just as black as ever!

"Meanwhile, the miner had come back for his soap to do the dishes with, and had seen Sherman taking his bath. He noticed how unhappy Sherman looked.

"S'matter, Kid," said the miner. "Can't you get it off?"

"No," said Sherman. "And I'm not a kid, —I'm a lamb."

"Excuse me," said the miner, with a twinkle in his eye. "You know what the trouble is? The water's too cold. Wool should be washed in luke-warm water. Now it just so happens that we're right near Yellowstone Park. There are a lot of warm and hot springs there. Just keep bathing and scrubbing in a warm spring, and you'll be all right. But don't jump in a hot spring —just a luke-warm one. I'll lend you my soap."

"Oh, thank you sir," said Sherman, happily. "I'll do exactly what you say." And he went looking for a warm spring. Soon after he found one, but not before he had tried a dozen others nearby, by dipping a toe in each one to test it. He hopped in the bathtub-like spring, and lathered himself well. Then he rinsed himself off, and stepped out to see if there was any change.

"WHOOSH!—Sherman shot up a hundred feet into the air on top of a pillar of water. He had stepped on a geyser—a spring that gushes every once in a while with tremendous power.

"A second later, Sherman landed ker-splash in another spring—but this was a very hot one. He scrambled out of it as fast as he could, but he was too late. Sherman Sheep had shrunk to less than half-size! Hot water shrinks wool. He was a midget sheep now, but still a black one.

"He went back to the miner's cabin to return the soap. The miner felt so sorry for him, that he asked Sherman to live with him.

"What—you'd live with a Black Sheep—and a midget one, at that?" asked Sherman in surprise.

"Why not?" said the miner. "Anyway, I'm a black sheep myself. All my family went to sea—I'm a landlubber. Sometimes, people are called Black Sheep just because they're different from others."

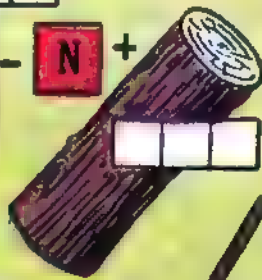

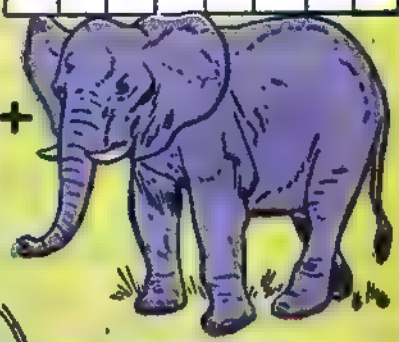

"So," concluded Professor Owl. "Sherman Sheep lived happily with the miner for many, many years. In fact, he stayed there so long, that he finally got what he wanted long before. He turned into a white sheep—from old age."
